Fishing for Sharks.

Not for years have the veteran fishermen of Atlantic City had such exciting sport as has been their luck for the last week. With the big bays lying back of the city literally filled with immense sharks, even the pursuit of the gamy bluefish out at sea fails to hold forth any attractions for the real disciple of Izaak Walton, and thus it happens that shark hunting parties put out daily from the inlet and return at nightfall with stories of the most exciting adventures and a great big trophy to sustain them.

Sharks are not unlike mankind, in that warm weather affects them most powerfully, and veteran fishermen have long been cognizant of the fact that after a continuous hot spell sharks abandon the open sea and make their way to the calmer depths of the inlets and bays along the coast. The present warm spell has been no exception to the rule, but the invasion of the shark family is greater numerically this summer than for many years past.

Several excursion parties, returning from the bays, report that scores of sharks have been seen, and since the news became generally known the big fish have been sought and caught, the sport being highly exciting. The hooks used are of iron, joined with chain to stout manilla rope. Whole fish are used as bait and the landing of the big prizes is always preceded by vicious struggles that provide material for highly colored tales.

WHALER MINNIE WRECKED.

Dashed to Pieces on the Rocks of Ugamok Island,

CREW ESCAPES TO THE SHORE.

Rescued by the Alliance and Walter Rich—Former Returns From Nome—Brings Thirty-Eight Passengers—Returns to Port Townsend for Quarantine Inspection—A Panic Aboard Whaler Gay Head.

Steamer Alliance, Capt. E. N. Hardwick, arrived from Nome yesterday at noon with news of the wreck in Bering sea of the Victoria whaling schooner Minnie. July 26, in a dense fog, the Minnie was driven on the reefs of Ugamok Island at the entrance to Unimak pass, through which she was trying to beat her way into the North Pacific. No lives were lost, the crew escaping to shore in the lifeboats. Five of them were picked up by the Alliance and brought to this city, while the remainder boarded the whaler Walter Rich. Those of the crew rescued by the Alliance are T. O. Lindquist, T. Hulbert, C. Degrand, T. Williams and T. Thorsen.

The Minnie is reported to be a total loss. She was a forty-five ton vessel, owned in Victoria by Capt. Victor Jacobson, her master.

The Alliance sailed from Nome by way of Dutch harbor July 30, a day earlier than the departure of the Oregon. She brought thirty-eight passengers, whose residences in the district were not longer than from two to five weeks. The vessel did not stop at the Port Townsend quarantine station for smallpox inspection, as required by the government regulations, so the authorities refused to allow her to land here. Her local agents sought to have the inspection made here, however, and finally succeeded.

Capt. Hardwick stated that his passengers were all in good health, and that for that matter he did not consider that smallpox any longer existed at Nome, as practically all of the patients had about recovered, and that no new cases had developed for ten or fifteen days prior to his departure.

The Alliance, the Jabez Howes, Wheeling, Rush, Gay Head, Elizabeth, Icarus, the latter an English cutter, were at Dutch harbor when she sailed from that port.

The death of four of the crew, the second mate, cabin boy and two sailors, of the Gay Head, an Arctic whaler, previously reported by the Post-Intelligencer, is said to have created almost a panic on the Gay Head. Four of her sailors deserted the vessel while the Alliance was in port, and her captain was having hard work to get enough seamen to work the Gay Head.

Passengers returned on the Alliance as follows:

R. W. French, J. H. Delanty, J. C. Reals, W. C. Watkins and wife, R. W. Getty, W. W. Getty, J. J. Paulini, J. Borkman, C. Edwards and wife, J. Lafreniere, L. O. Bruckart, Mrs. M. Trevitt, J. Livermore, J. Paine, M. Mathews, S. W. Collins, E. V. Williams, Rev. S. P. A. Lindahl, C. H. Townsend, R. A. Watkins, W. W. McNeil, R. S. Stringfellow, A. J. Post, J. Serell, D. Smith, J. C. Douglas and wife, J. H. Sheldon, F. S. Meady, H. Lane, G. Radzai, J. O. Lindquist, J. Hulbert, C. Degrand, J. Williams, J. Thorsen.
